Bacon (TSUS item 107. 3040) and canned bacon (item 107. 3540) also account for a small share of U. S. imports of pork. Bacon is the cured pork belly. U. S. production of canned bacon is negligible or nil. Other U. S. imports of pork are classifiable in TSUSA items 107. 3060 and 107. 3560; pork-based luncheon meat is believed to account for the bulk of U. S. imports under these item numbers. The imported pork-based luncheon meat is generally comparable to many U. S. produced types. U. S. Imports In the following 3 parts of this section of the report, imports are discussed in three different ways: first, in terms of imports by product type; second, in terms of imports by country of origin; and third, in terms of import penetration ratios. The first part shows that canned hams and shoulders in terms of value, are the leading type of pork product imported into the United States but fresh, chilled, or frozen pork is the leading type in terms of quantity. The second part shows that the EC was the leading supplier of U. S. imports of pork, with Canada and the NMEs combined accounting for nearly all the remainder. The final part of the this section shows that the import penetration ratio for pork products increased during 1980-84 and January-June 1985. U. S. Imports by Product Type All pork U. S. imports of all pork products rose from 546 million pounds (carcass weight equivalent), valued...
