INTRODUCTION initiative to take a college entrance exam and submit an application for admission to a four-year institution. If the financial aid system is providing equal educational opportunities and access to postsecondary schooling, one would expect no substantial differences by family income in the four-year college enrollment rates of students whose academic records show they are likely to be admitted to a four-year college and who have taken the necessary steps to be considered for admission. The findings of this study indicate that this is indeed generally the case: there were no substantial differences by family income in the four-year college enrollment rates of college-qualified high school graduates who apply to and are accepted for admission at four-year colleges. The report begins by examining some of the important background characteristics of the 1992 high school graduates and their relationship to postsecondary enrollment and the types of institutions attended within two years of high school graduation. This is followed by an examination of postsecondary costs and financial aid among low-income students enrolled in 1992 - 93. Next is a comparison of the educational expectations of the high school graduates when they were in eighth grade to their expectations in the senior year, as well as their plans for postsecondary education as seniors. The college qualification index developed for this study will then be discussed, and used to focus on those students who appear to have...
